Introduction to the Gospel of Mark

The beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God. (Mark 1:1). With this statement, the author of the Gospel of Mark begins his account of the life of Jesus. Traditionally, this Gospel has been attributed to John Mark, who received the material for his work through the Apostle Peter. However, the identity of the author is not known with certainty and is not important. This is a book about Jesus Christ, the Son of God.

It is thought to be the first of the four Gospels to be written (ca. 60-70 AD). In this sense it is a “beginning.” But more than a chronological beginning, the material in this book is foundational in the pursuit of the knowledge of Jesus Christ. This Gospel is not the whole picture of Jesus Christ, but a beginning sufficient for a saving knowledge of Jesus, the Son of God. He is the Son of God Who came in the flesh. The purpose of His coming is clearly stated by Jesus Himself:

And he said unto them, Let us go into the next towns, that I may preach there also: for therefore came I forth. (Mark 1:38)

When Jesus heard it, he saith unto them, They that are whole have no need of the physician, but they that are sick: I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance. (Mark 2:17)

For even the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many. (Mark 10:45)

He is the Son of God Who came to preach the Gospel by which He calls sinners to salvation. This salvation is afforded them by His death as a ransom for their sins.

The Gospel of Mark is unique in several ways when compared with the other Gospels. First of all, there is an emphasis upon the works of Jesus more than His teachings. Only four parables appear in Mark’s writings compared with nineteen in Matthew and twenty-seven in Luke. Only one of the six discourses of Jesus is recorded and that quite truncated. In contrast, Mark records sixteen miracles which is the same as Matthew and Luke contain. Mark wants us to see Jesus Christ as the Son of God. The teachings are limited to the basic essential truths which, though sufficient for salvation, are only the beginning.

The structure and message of Mark turns on the critical question in Mark 8:29: “Whom say ye that I am?” By the time Jesus asks His disciples this question, we have seen enough of His works and heard enough of His preaching to utter a hearty “Amen” to Peter’s confession: “Thou art the Christ.” Subsequent to this, the story turns our attention to the implications of this truth. For Jesus, it meant that He “must suffer many things, and be rejected of the elders, and of the chief priests, and scribes, and be killed, and after three days rise again.” (Mark 8:31) For each disciple, it meant that he must “deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me.” (Mark 8:34)

Through his Gospel, Mark asks each generation to answer the same question: Who is Jesus? Mark provides the elementary truths about Jesus to enable each person to answer this question. The Person and work of Jesus are presented concisely and clearly. This is truly a beginning, but not merely a beginning of information about the life of Jesus in a distant age. It is the beginning of eternal life through Jesus Christ, the Son of God, for all who follow Him.
